A Note From Fr. Larry

Elsewhere in this bulletin, you will see the list of the 13 children from our parish Religious Education Program and from St. Joseph the Worker Catholic Academy who made their First Holy Communion at our 5:30 p.m. Saturday Vigil Mass and our 10:30 a.m. and 12 Noon Sunday Masses last weekend. Congratulations to them and to their parents and loved ones; and thanks to our Coordinator of Religious Education Kathryn Sisto and to the catechists and teachers who prepared them. These children were part of the group whose First Communion had to be postponed from last Spring until now because of the coronavirus crisis. Others in that group will be receiving their First Holy Communion at Saturday Vigil and Sunday Morning Masses for the next three weekends.

This Sunday, (September 20) is Catechetical Sunday. At the 10:30 Mass this Sunday, we will be offering a special prayer of blessing and thanks for the volunteer catechists who serve so faithfully to instruct the students in our Religious Education program.

Thank you for your generosity to the Pope's special request for donations at last weekend's Masses (to supplement what is usually taken up on Good Friday) for the Catholic people and religious sites in the Holy Land. Some envelopes are still coming in and we will report on results in next week's bulletin.

The U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) has made another special request for donations at next weekend's (September 26/27) Masses. This will be for emergency relief for those suffering because of the hurricanes in the Southern U.S. and the wildfires in the West. Because we still have no traditional "collections", we ask you to mark your Hurricanes/Wildfire donations: Please make checks payable to Holy Name of Jesus Parish with the notation "Hurricanes/Wildfires" in the memo line, or place cash in envelopes marked with the words "Hurricanes/Wildfires". We will have pre-marked envelopes next to the collection baskets near the Church doors if you need one. Please put all regular and special donations into the baskets; we will sort the contents and consolidate the "Hurricanes/wildfires" donations into a single check to be sent to the Diocese for forwarding to the USCCB. As always, thank you and God bless you for your generosity.

SCRIPTURE INSIGHTS

Please consider the following commentary on this Sunday's readings (Isaiah 55:6-9; Philippians 1:20c-24, 27a; Gospel: Matthew 20:1-16a)

"EMPLOYER OR PATRON"

What is God like? The answer to this common question always reflects the culture of the questioner or the one who answers the question. Today's parable reports one of Jesus' many answers to this question. It should be no surprise that in this parable God behaves in accord with Middle Eastern values.

Limited Good

In general, Americans believe that "there is always more where this came from," whether it is oil, jobs, money, or whatever. This attitude makes it extremely difficult for Americans to understand concepts such as shortages, extinction, or anything similar.

Our Mediterranean ancestors in the faith believed "there is no more where this came from." Everything (jobs, wealth, honor, or whatever one could imagine) was limited in quantity and already distributed. The jobs at the vineyard were already filled. How dare any worker think there might be more jobs?

Moreover, to ask for a job is to deprive the employer of something he owns. This is shameful. Instead, workers have to be invited by the owner to work for him. The owner in this parable goes out four times in one day looking for workers to invite, and each time he hires everyone in sight. Such behavior by the owner and the potential workers is very honorable, because it respects the cultural idea that all goods—including jobs—are limited.

Patronage

In America, workers look for jobs, employers hire the best qualified workers, they agree on a wage and respect a practice called "seniority." None of this existed in the ancient Mediterranean world and none of these elements can be found in the parable.

Only to the first hired does the owner promise "the usual daily wage." They agree to accept it. To the second (and presumably all subsequent groups), the owner says: "I will pay you whatever is right." At the end of the day, the owner pays the workers beginning with the last hired. This is an important narrative point without which the story would collapse because those hired first would have no reason to hang around if they were paid first. This point also indicated to ancient Mediterranean peoples that the owner wears two hats: he is an employer but can also be a patron.

A patron is a person of means who freely chooses to treat other people (always of lower status) "as if" they were family members. No one can bid for or "earn" such treatment, but everyone in the Mediterranean world of antiquity and the present seeks to have a patron.

The vineyard owner treats the last hired generously and graciously, "as if" they were relatives. They did nothing to "earn" such treatment. The owner gave them "what is right" for relatives. At the same time, the owner treats the first hired in accord with their agreement. If he chose to, the owner could disregard the agreement and treat the first hired generously, "as if" they were relatives. But he doesn't so choose. To the first hired, the vineyard owner chooses to be employer; to the last hired, the vineyard owner chooses to be a patron.

Jesus' lesson is not about economics but about God from a Middle Eastern perspective. Insinuated in Jesus' explanation is that God's choice for treating people may reflect how people deal with God. Such ideas clash with American economic ideas of equal opportunity, contracts, seniority, and the like. How would God behave from an American perspective?"

ST. MATTHEW - APOSTLE, EVANGELIST, AND TAX COLLECTOR

Most of us may not like paying taxes, but we do so to help ensure our country, state and city can provide our communities with much-needed services. Today, tax rates are set based on the various income brackets. Things were quite different in Jesus' time, though.

Rome set the rates for the taxes that were to be collected from the various territories they had conquered. Tax collectors were local men hired by the Roman rulers and, because of their jobs, they were not well liked. To make matters worse, the collectors charged more in taxes than what was actually owed to Rome. This extra money was split between the tax collector and the local officials. Rome's rulers didn't care, as long as they received what they expected. This practice was certainly unethical. In fact, everyone involved was actually stealing.

Monday, September 21 is the Feast of St. Matthew, who was one of the twelve Apostles and an Evangelist, as well as one of the four writers of the Gospels. Matthew, who was also known as Levi, was a tax collector when he first met Jesus. By inviting Matthew to join Him, Jesus lets us know that He also calls upon sinners to follow Him. Once we get past the fact that he was a tax collector, we can learn from St. Matthew how to better follow Jesus.

In speaking about St. Matthew in 2006, Pope Emeritus Benedict XVI said "those who seem to be the farthest from holiness can even become a model of the acceptance of God's mercy and offer a glimpse of its marvelous effects in their own lives."
